Theory Examination

Wednesday afternoon last saw a new chapter in the history of amateur radio in EI with the first theory examination using the new multiple choice question format being held at the ComReg offices in Dublin. Nineteen candidates from fourteen different counties sat the examination. Two of these candidates were from Northern Ireland. This number, together with the 14 candidates who sat an essay type examination last June shows that there is a demand for licences and it is clear that most of the candidates studied on their own for these examinations. The examination comprised 60 multiple choice questions in three main sections and the time allowed was two hours. All candidates finished well within the allocated time.

The holding of this examination was the culmination of a long process of discussion and negotiation between the IRTS and ComReg so as to ensure that arrangements for the examination for an Experimenter's Licence would be on a firm footing for the future. The hard work and effort put into this venture by a group of people in the Society paid off and it is intended for the future to have examinations in January and June of each year in Dublin and at other centres if the number of candidates requires it. It is hoped now that the examination process is on a firm footing that Clubs throughout the country will recommence classes for the licence examination.

The Society is working on a project, which we hope will be of assistance to clubs in this regard. New entrants are the lifeblood of amateur radio and we cannot afford to be complacent about the importance of attracting newcomers. We hope that those who sat the examination during the week will shortly be airing their new EI callsigns on the bands.
